Construction practice included both plaintiff and defense work. Have represented public entities and other commercial building owners, as well as developers, contractors and building product manufacturers. Claims handled include warranty and defect claims; differing site condition claims; water intrusion/building envelope issues; curtain wall issues; soil settlement and expansion issues; delay claims; contract interpretation, payment and lien disputes; surety and performance bond claims; mechanic's lien disputes; claims arising out of guaranteed maximum price contracts, design-build and design-bid-build contracts, and construction management-at-risk contracts; insurance coverage disputes, among others.

Mediator Experience	Served as an appointed settlement judge and mediator as a Judge Pro Tem for the Arizona Superior Court for seven years, handling a wide variety of consumer, contract, business, and personal injury claims. Cases mediated include disputes arising out of commercial contracts, standard form and consumer contracts, partnership agreements, real estate transactions, trust agreements, franchise and licensing agreements, credit card, construction and remodeling agreements, loans, and other financial transactions. Mediator Style & Process Preferences	My decades of experience as an advocate and retained counsel in traditional litigation proceedings taught me that litigation is a costly, time-consuming, and burdensome way to resolve disputes. Litigation is a path guaranteed to achieve an unpredictable outcome, and one that often results in no winners. The litigation process takes a huge toll on participants, both from the standpoint of attorneys' fees and costs, and also because of the time and attention required to pursue a litigation matter through trial. Business personnel involved in litigation are forced to spend time on non-productive tasks--such as gathering documents and appearing for depositions--which divert them from productively pursuing their organization's mission. Mediation provides an opportunity for businesses and individuals to achieve a sensible resolution to a dispute. The parties themselves control the outcome and can design a settlement that suits their individual and business needs. As a mediator, I am committed to working with the parties for as long as it takes to achieve a settlement. My role as a mediator includes understanding each party's settlement goals and priorities, setting a tone and framework for the mediation that encourages negotiation, and providing a neutral risk assessment where such an evaluation may help the parties better understand the pros and cons of settlement. A problem-solver by nature, I enjoy helping the parties identify creative solutions for their dispute. To ensure an effective mediation, I generally schedule a pre-mediation telephone call with counsel to obtain their input on potential obstacles to settlement and suggestions for increasing the likelihood of settlement at mediation.
